

WHO WILL BE THERE

- Test sessions at the weekend are generally quite small – a large group would be 12. The typical size in 2005 was 3-6 people.
- There will often be one or two adults looking for career change (aged anywhere between 25-40) and the rest would be at school, university or fairly new in the job market as a graduate.

PREPARATION

- This is a performance test but it is not knowledge based so there is not much you can do to prepare - other than make sure you are rested on the day and completing the Practice Questions (in paper or via the www.careeranalysts.com.au website).
- You also need to complete the Morrisby Vocational Questionnaire. This multiple choice interest questionnaire takes most people around 20-30 minutes. There will be spare copies at the test session so if you haven't received one you can complete it on the day.
- It is important not to be late. We start on time and the first test is 30 minutes - so if you miss the start of this you will either need to complete it at the end of the session - or more likely miss the entire session.
- All pencils etc. are provided so the only things you need bring with you are the completed Interest Questionnaire and reading glasses if you need them.

WHAT HAPPENS

- People arrive and choose a seat. They then wait for the session to start, have a walk around, talk to others who are waiting etc. The tables are set out like a classroom. You won't be asked to say anything or introduce yourself.
- The tests range in length from 30 mins. to just a few seconds but most are around 10 minutes. All tests are timed with a stopwatch.
- There is time for questions before each test and although it is a performance test the atmosphere is quite relaxed.
- There is a break about half way through and tea, coffee and soft drinks are provided during the break along with biscuits – but if you'd like coke etc. bring one along.
